

Yes. Your therapist will only consider breaking confidentiality if you tell us something that reveals an immediate danger to yourself or someone else.

If your therapist is concerned for your safety they will discuss this with you.

This will always be with the view of keeping you or someone else safe. All our therapists are accredited with the BABCP and are registered with a professional body that has strict ethical codes of conduct relating to confidentiality.